RUINS OF ANCIENT SOLOMON'S MINES

some of which are laid together in a checker-board pattern. The houses of these ancients were circular, and they seem to have been formed by a granite paste which had hardened by burning. There are the remains of two large circular buildings between this city and Bulawayo, and the ruins at Mambo are almost as interesting as those of Zimbabwe.

The Temples of Zimbabwe.

The temples at Zimbabwe lie about 100 miles from Salisbury, and between 200 and 300 miles from Bulawayo. They consist of a great temple, some large fortifications and an acropolis, which is supposed to have been in existence for centuries. It is still in operation. South of the temple are stone walls, led to gold-smelting furnaces and caves, and in the museum here at Bulawayo there are crucibles which were found there and which belonged to these ancients. Some of the crucibles have the gold still in them, and there are other relics which show the old methods of gold working. There are also large ingots of gold, no thicker than a thread, and an ingot of gold about an inch long and a fourth of an inch thick. The ingot seems to have been a piece of the money of those days. There were also copper chains, beautifully made, and ingots of tin, although so far no tin deposits have been discovered nearby.

Zimbabwe ruins are on the high plateau, about 4,000 feet above sea level, about two-thirds of a mile above the river. They are connected with other ruins which run the whole length of the plateau side of the Sabi River, and are in almost all cases situated at a short distance of quartz reefs containing gold. At Zimbabwe itself the ruins cover a large area. There is a great temple about long, the wall of which is at one point one foot high and sixteen feet thick at the base. This wall is made up of small blocks of granite with uniform facings, laid up so closely that there is comparatively no vegetation upon the ruins. They were made without mortar or cement. This is remarkable, considering the floor is of a cement of power.

There are two round towers in the enclosure, which have been erected as monuments. They are composed of granite blocks.
